There was a killing in an east side stable this afternoon that set a ood-size slice of the most crowded section in the world into a frenzy of excitement. For many months Louis Schneider, of No. 87 Delancey street, and Harry Feuerstein, of No. 287 Seventh street, were rivals in the ice business. Finally they patched up a truce and divided the territory. Yesterday the old trouble broke out again over service to the best customer on the route.
